Fire

The Hayward Hand-Grenade is an entirely new device for putting out fires. It is a glass globe about four inches in diameter, filled with a chemical fluid which generates enormous volumes of fire-extinguishing gas when brought in contact with flame. They keep indefinitely, are sealed, will and always ready for service. They are simple and easy to use—any child of six can throw them.

Every household should have a few. Fire comes suddenly, and it is not altogether water quick enough to stop a fire before the flames. One Grenade may be enough, two or three will certainly do the work, and save your home. They are highly endorsed by Insurance Companies, Fire Departments, and by those who have used them.

CHIMNEY FIRE.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 13, 1884.
Last evening, while we were having a little family party, about 10 o'clock my house took fire from the chimney, and looked as if the house would burn down. I ran for the Hayward Hand-Grenade, threw one on the fire, which put it out immediately. You have my recommendation that your Grenades are a "big thing" for putting out fires and ought to be in every house.

MOSES MANN, JR.

FIRE FROM LAMP.

Whitney's Point, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1884.
As regards the fire we had, it occurred in this way: A lamp was dropped on a large sand drum, which is connected with the dust blower. The wheel and suction throat to blower was at once in flames. We were promptly on hand with the Grenades. We used two which extinguished every spark instantly. We would not be without them.
